The concession made to us is that the marine league at the entrance to bays and creeks is not to be measured from a line drawn from a line drawn arose such bays and erreks where they first narrow to a width of ten miles. These are the important provisions. There are articles providing for a commission to delimit the waters closed to the United States by the treaty of 1818 to make the Strait of Canso free to our bishing vessels, to regulate the actions of our fishermen in Camadian ports, and for reciprocity in respect to the privileges conferred under the treaty.

Pending the milication of the treaty the British negotiators have promised the enforcement of the following temporary arrangement.

First—For a period not exceeding two years from the present date, the privilege of entering the bays and harbors of the Atlantic coats of tanada and Newfoundland shall be granted to United States Islaing yeasels by aimual licenses at a fee $1,50 per ton, for the following pur-

The President also commends the temporary agreement as a liberal and friendly act on the part of Great Britain.

The treaty has not been discussed sufficiently to show what will be the action of the Senate, but it has been shown that there is some vigorous opposition.

Lincoln's Gettysburg Speech. Hon, Edward McPherson, in a letter to Horatio King, says that so far as he is concerned, the statement given as his in THE CETTE of the 18th list, from the New York San in regard to furnishing paper for Mr. Lincoln to write his speech on etc., "is wholly imaginary; that he did not ride with Mr. Lincoln to Gettysburg or elsewhere, and that the whole statement is a fidsification." He says he contradicted it immediately on its appearance, but that he has "despaired of ever wiping out that San interview."

A ROMANCE IN REAL LIFE.

How a Plower that Budded in Italy

Came to Bloom in America. In 1884, Judge Charles E. Kincaid, now Washington correspondent of the Louis ville Thacs, then private secretary to Gov ernor Knott of Kentucky, was appointed Florence to remove the remains of Joel T. Hart, the sculptor, from Italy to Kencky, and the Judge was not given time to learn Italian before his departure. It happened when he was on his way from Mian to Verona, where he was going to see Juliet's tomb, that he could not make the conductor of the train quite under-stand his Kentucky-Italian, and he was liable to any sort of a confection when a quite gentleman in the compartment in-terrupted in very good. English, and soon had everything going smoothly, and healed all differences between the Judge had everything going smoothly, and healed all differences between the Judge and the conductor.

Then the Judge and the stranger began talking, and it developed that the stranger was a sculptor of Milan, with his home in Venice, to which city he was then going to visit his parents and family.

When the Judge got off at Verona it had been agreed that the two should meet again in Venice, and they did, the sculptor being on hand with a gondola and the Judge embarked with him for the first time on the raging waters of the Grand Canal. The sculptor told the Judge his story, how he had been in London with the famous Boehm, how he had helped Carpeau of Paris in his work on the statuary in the Grand Opera House, how he had presented the city of Milan with a bust of Palladius, which he showed him at a later date in the Ducal Palace how he had won four silver and one gold medal, how he had striven always and how little there was in it, and how, finally, he had a sweetheart and some day hoped for the good times that would let him claim her as his own.

He was of good family, and his sweetheart had been rich, but her wealth had been lost by the speculations of those having it in charge, and all in all the sculptor's sky was not as blue as Italian skies are reputed to be. The Judge, however, came to the rescue with bright stories of what America had in store for gentius, industry and temperance, and when the two parted it was with the hope ever, came to the rescue with bright stories of what America had in store for genius, industry and temperance, and when the two parted it was with the hope that both would meet again in America.

After the Judge's return he began to look about him, and in the course of time he found a place in the Supervising Architect's Office where the services of an expert in architectural sculpture were in demand and he sent word to his friend in Milan that he had a place for him. About eighteen months ago the friend came, and the name of Eugenio Pedon appeared on the rolls of the Architect's Office, and Pedon's work soon became a necessity of the office. In the meantime he was living closely and building high hopes, and every mail that went between Washington and Milan had a whitewinged develocity and way in the piles of letters, but he said never a word, and the Judge sometimes wondered it, absence made the heart grow funder.

Week before last Pedon secured a couple of days leave of absence and went over to New York how the land allocation.

MIL EDISON'S INVENTIONS.

The Wixard Enthusiastic Over His Phonograph Other Ideas, Chicago correspondence St. Paul News homas A. Edison, the wizard of Menle Park, was in the city yesterday, attending he semi-annual conference of the managers of the Edison electric light companies Mr. Edison looked healthy and strong, and his neat, clean-shaven face was the st arisen from the dinner-table and was ighting a cigar when the News reporter accosted him.

"Always glad to meet the newspaper boys," he began, as he extended his hand.
"You want to know what brings me here? Well, the managers of the Edison electric light companies are holding their semi-annual convention, and I came from New Jersey to take part in the sessions. They usually meet twice a year to discuss the best methods of management—how to companies and run the offices and similar questions of interest to the companies."

similar questions of interest to the companies."

"What may the public expect from you soon, Mr. Edison?"

"I have been busy of late fixing up my laboratory near Llewelyn Park, Orange, N. J., and in perfecting the phonograph. As soon as the freet gets out of the ground we are going to build a new factory at Bloomfield and put in machinery capable of turning out 250 phonographs a day. At present we are making about twenty a day. You'll see it shortly. Our agents are now learning its use, and I expect by the middle of April to have the new instruments all over the country."

are now learning its use, and I expect by the middle of April to have the new instruments all over the country."

"Tell me something about it."

"Well, it is a little instrument smaller than the ordinary type-writer; it will record any sound transmitted to it—violin and piano-forte music, whistling notes, or anything you may give it. By the way, it will be a great help to you newspaper men when you are in a hurry to have your copy put in type. Suppose at night you come late. You get to your phongraph and begin talking to it. Each of your words is recorded on a little wax cylinder and repeated to the type-setter at the other end. It will take down anything you may dictate, and to prevent confusion, for the phonograph will talk faster than yourself, it repeats the last six words of every broken sentence. Where can it be used? Why, in any number of places. At the courts, to take down the testimony of witnesses; at the church, to record a sermon; at the operahouse, where a famous prima donna may he singing."

"I do not quite understand how this can be done."

"Let me try to explain. The phonograph is made up of the mouthpiece, where it receives the sound; a spirally-grooved cylinder carrying a sheet of tinfoll and wax, by which it receives the records of the novements of the diaphragm, the human voice, etc., and another mouthpiece on which the speech received in cylinder is reproduced. A screw connects with the cylinder; you talk and your speech is recorded; now remove the screw and the second mouthpiece repeats the sounds the wax cylinder has received. The wax cylinders are about the size of an ordinary napkin-ring and of the same thickness, with a capacity of 250 words."

"Will the public take kindly to it?"

"I believe so. It is no longer in the experimental stages, nor is it a mere curiosity. Correspondence can hereafter be performed through it, and the labors of private secretaries will be dispensed with."

Have you been working on any other new inventions?"

"Oh, 18s: I've got at least 100 new ideas in my head still on the embryonic stage. Some of them I've been working on for years. Two or three I bring out this year. I'm working hard on my scheme of house-lighting out of the waste heat generated by coals."

"How far have you succeeded?"

Mr. Edison will go back to Orange tonight. "I'll strike a number of new things yet," he remarked in parting with the reporter, and hastened back to the meeting where he was awaited.

He was a cadet in the Virginia Military Institute when the war broke out in 1860, and joined the Confederate navy, having been appointed midshipman on the Confederate cruiser MacRae, lying in the harbor of New Orleans. Midshipman Blane was on the vessel when the Federal fleet passed the forts and captured New Orleans, and subsequently came up to the city on the MacRae under a flag of trace. He then joined the Confederate gunboat Webb and was promoted to a first lieutenancy. When the Webb ran the blockade in 1864 Lieutenant Blane was the officer of the day. A shell from one of the Federal gunboats fell on the deck of the Webb and Lieutenant Blane gallantly sprang forward, grasped the shell and threw it overboard, thus saving the vessel from immediate destruction. On the way down the river below the city the Webb encountered a flotilla of Federal war vessels, and was run ashore and burned to prevent capture. The officers and crew then surrendered and Lieutenant Blane was sent to Fort Warren, Boston, where he remained a prisoner until the surrender of the study of law and soon took a front rank in the profession.
